IBM Patent Disclosure for SNIA XAM Specification Ver. 1.0

IBM, in support of SNIA intellectual property policies, supports a full disclosure policy for published patent applications and issued patents with Essential Claims when developing SNIA specifications.

IBM's intellectual property disclosure is based upon the working knowledge of those individuals actively involved with the development of the XAM Specification Ver. 1.0 and does not represent the results of an IBM patent portfolio search.

IBM hereby identifies the following which along with any foreign counterparts thereof may contain Essential Claims necessary to implement the XAM Specification Ver. 1.0, as currently defined and understood:

- U.S. Patent No. 7,117,322 titled "Method, System, And Program For Retention Management And Protection Of Stored Objects";
- U.S. Patent No. 7,107,416 titled "Method, System, and Program for Implementing Retention Policies to Archive Records";
- U.S. Publication No. 20060282630 titled "Method, System, And Program For Retention Management And Protection Of Stored Objects"; and
- U.S. Publication No. 20060282629 titled "Method, System, and Program for Implementing Retention Policies to Archive Records".

IBM will honor applicable license obligations as defined by the SNIA IP Policy with respect to Essential Claims, upon written request, if the XAM Specification Ver. 1.0 is designated as SNIA Architecture. This includes granting worldwide nonexclusive licenses, under reasonable, and non-discriminatory terms, for use of Essential Claims, in accordance with IBM's then current and usual licensing terms, for compliant implementations of the XAM Specification Ver. 1.0 SNIA Architecture specification.

A party wishing to request a license should contact:

IBM Director of Licensing
IBM Corporation
